Who selects projects for Connect Oregon funds?

Project selection has several steps:

1. ODOT staff with expertise in air, rail or marine transportation review projects.
2. Local and modal transportation committees review projects in their geographic area or respective transportation mode.
3. A final review committee combines the multiple ranked lists into a final recommended funding list for ODOT's governing body the Oregon Transportation Commission.
4. The commission reviews and approves the final selected projects at one of their public meetings.

Can I use a federal grant as a match, or use a Connect Oregon grant as a match for a federal grant?

Yes to both scenarios. Many past recipients have used Connect Oregon grant funds in concert with other federal grant funding.

One potential issue is timing: we suggest you review application timelines and other requirements for various grant funding programs to ensure everything lines up with your needs.

Are there minimum or maximum awards for transportation modes or geographic areas?

No, however if some projects are closely ranked or tied, reviewers may consider regional equity of fund distribution.

Is there a minimum or maximum allowed funding request?

No. Applicants may request any amount of the available funding. In the most recent funding round, awarded funds ranged from $150,000 to $14 million for individual projects.

When are awarded funds distributed?

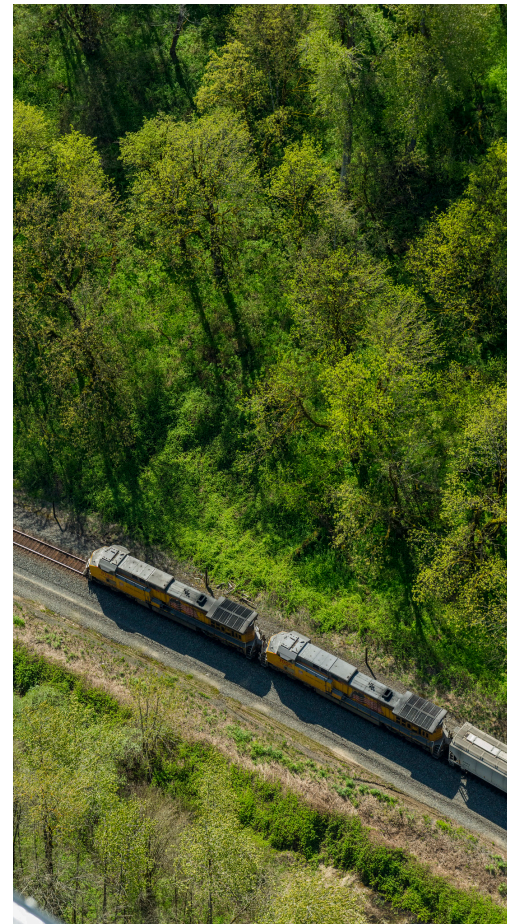

After project completion. Connect Oregon is a reimbursement program. You may only request a reimbursement after you have paid your eligible project costs.

How can I check the status of my application?

ODOT staff will keep applicants updated on their application status, and where it is in the review process, via email or phone.

What is the required funding match?

The program requires that award recipients provide at least 30% matching funds (50% for Class I railroads.) There are many sources that can contribute toward your match.
